WHO IS Diabetic ill-treated in prison TO BLAME?

Matthew O'Hara lived in Hackney for six years before he died recently. He was a diabetic, yet he was not given the vital drugs he needed to stay alive while in prison. His death has caused widespread concern and a local M.P. has taken up the case. The whole episode gives rise to serious doubts about the way prison officers carried out their responsibilities.

Matthew came to Hackney in 1974 and was an active member of Hackney Mental Patients' Union until its collapse in 1976. Since then, he had continued his legal work for patients' rights from his home in Ickburgh Road where he provided accommodation for several ex-patients. He recently completed a play that illustrates the injustices of English mental health laws. He was a company member of Centerprise and a member of Hackney Workers' Educational Association.

Born in Dublin in 1939, Matthew used the Irish name, Maithiu O hEadhra, on all legal documents and it is under this name that his death has been reported in the Irish Press. He was a patient in Dundrum Mental Hospital in Dublin since 1970 when he won his release by taking his case to the High Court and proving that his detention was unconstitutional. He had taught himself constitutional law from textbooks smuggled into the hospital. His unorthodox legal methods secured the release of many fellow patients in Dundrum.

Earlier this year Matthew was summoned for alleged rate arrears. He believed he had been wrongfully arrested and it appears that the rating authority had not established his correct name or who was responsible for the rates before taking action. He refused to provide his correct name to the magistrates court as he intended to have the case reviewed in a higher court where he believed he could prove the impropriety of the proceedings.

On 12 March the magistrates sent him to Pentonville on a seven-day sentence for contempt of court. On admission to the prison he refused to give his name and this, he alleged, led to an assault on him by prison officers. The assault is denied by the prison.

Matthew had suffered from diabetes since 1959, but had his condition well under control with insulin injections. As soon as he arrived at the prison he told them he was diabetic and several times during his stay he asked for insulin, but never received it. The prison authorities say that he concealed from them that he was diabetic.

On 14 March, Matthew began to cough blood, a result he believed of the assault which had included a kick in the stomach. Two days later he was transferred from the prison to the Royal Northern Hospital where doctors described him as "pale, thin, wasted, lethargic, mentally slow and confused". They recognised these as symptoms of diabetes ketosis acidosis: the build-up of poisons in the body of a diabetic owing to not having received insulin. He was given an immediate transfusion and insulin treatment.

A friend, Andrew Roberts, visited Matthew in the Royal Northern on 17 and 18 March. He told the inquest that his friend's physical condition was so altered that it had taken him 15 minutes to convince himself that it was Matthew. Matthew had great difficulty speaking but he managed to explain that his condition was due to having been refused insulin in the prison. He also referred to an assault.

On a later occasion Andrew was told that the alleged assault was made by prison officers and had included a blow to the stomach, and that Matthew thought this had caused his stomach problems.

Matthew discharged himself on 19th March, against medical advice. The hospital

Old age knocks at Council door

August is a quiet month in Hackney, at least down in the bowels of the Town Hall in Mare Street. The Council goes into recess and members take themselves off to the sun, to rekindle these fires of socialism which burn so deep inside them.

But politicians never relax. There's still the behind-the-scenes machination to get on with. Last month I told you about the GLC member reselection process which is going on at present and the dropping of Ellis Hillman. Ellis has since been very keen to tell people what good works he has performed as the member for Hackney Central, which may be a sign that there may yet be a counter-coup launched by his pals, the old guard mafia who usually control the Labour Party there. And for the benefit of these poor Tories who rely on the Hackney Gazette for their political information, it is true that Ellis has been dumped. It's just that the Gazette didn't know, which is why you had to write them a letter and ask them.

Also, as we predicted last month, Ken Livingstone is saying goodbye to Hackney North. He managed to get selected to fight Paddington next May, which is a seat that Labour should win, so a new face will be taking up the cudgels to defend the worthies of the northern third of the borough. My prediction is still that it will be Tony Millwood, the current chairperson of the constituency Labour Party.

Another local face that we might see next year in County Hall is that of Councillor Catharine Hoey. However, she will have to represent an outer London seat, since she works in an ILEA college, and therefore is not allowed to represent an Inner London seat, as she would also be automatically a member of ILEA. Walthamstow is likely to be the next step on the road to the House of Commons for the bearer of Hackney's Olympic message. The question is, will she also get a Parliamentary seat in the next round of selection and manage the feat of being a local councillor, a GLC councillor and an MP at the same time?

My natural good taste forbids me from making any unnecessary and unwholesome remarks about the severe cases of chronic death that seems to be afflicting members of the old guard on the Council itself. So far this year we have seen the demise of no less than three of the OAPs who occupy the comfy green seats in the Council chamber.

At the moment there are vacancies in two wards solidly controlled by the old guard, Wenlock and Chatham. This latter is particularly interesting since for many years it has been represented by three residents of the Trelawney Estate, Messrs Kotz, Millen and West. Who will take over from Dan West now? Will the Chatham branch manage to see past the junction of Morning Lane and Vallette Street? For these and many other answers look in next month's issue of HPP.

It will be a busy season for by-elections this autumn. Hackney Central has at last agreed that Susan Gorman can stand down from Rectory Ward, which she has wanted to do for more than one year. Rectory is one of the few wards in the constituency which has not been totally controlled by the old guard, and it is also the seat which polled the highest Communist vote in the 1978 elections, due to a lot of hard work by local party secretary David Green. The CP is rumoured to be wanting to adopt a broader approach to this election. Although David Green has been re-adopted as the candidate, the CP is keen to promote him as a broad democratic alliance candidate - and if Rectory Labour Party have some turgid right-winger forced on them, then it might be a good fight.

Youth on the dole

Dear HPP,

This is an open letter to all voluntary organisations and community groups working in Hackney asking for assistance in meeting the needs of the borough's unemployed school leavers.

The problems of finding jobs or getting any work experience are becoming more critical for Hackney school leavers. Already those registered with the Careers Service are up 80 per cent on last year, and vacancies notified are down by 60 per cent; there are four young people unemployed for every job available in the borough. However, many of these young people could probably get work in the City and West End if they could be helped to become more competitive.

The Council is most concerned to help these young people and recognises that it cannot do it alone. Apart from any other consideration, many of the activities which the young people themselves would like to be involved in are present in the voluntary sector and not present within the Council's organisation.

TARGET

It is proposed to set up a Community Service scheme for 40 young people using Central Government funds, i.e. the MSC. (A target start date of 1 October has been suggested.) It is possible that this might usefully be an extension of the PIP Youth Workforce.

The MSC schemes are learning and confidence-building exercises for young people to enable them to take jobs or further training. The young people, called "trainees", are paid an allowance of £23.50 per week while on a scheme and this is seen as analogous to a student grant. However, they are still registered as unemployed and the Careers Service is continually seeking permanent employment for them. The schemes are not "work" in the way we usually think of it. At least one day a week the trainees would be undergoing formal and informal training at whatever level was individually required.

The Community Service scheme now proposed should be a combination of projects and placements to meet MSC requirements for this type of scheme. I should be very grateful if you could consider within your organisation/group whether:

1. you have any projects which need to be carried out (eg landscaping of day nursery gardens; refurbishment of equipment; running a creche or library) or
2. goods which you might like to be able to obtain more cheaply (eg patchwork quilts for the elderly, soft toys for playgroups and day nurseries) or
3. whether your group could give work experience to a trainee in a day nursery, office or other activity on a one-to-one basis.

Mrs Sue Gwaspari, who has a

brief from the MSC to expand Community Service schemes in London, is working with PIP to progress the scheme. Mrs Gwaspari is experienced in this field and co-incidentally has a good knowledge of Hackney having been involved in play provision from the voluntary side three or four years ago.

If your group is interested and think you can help or if you would like more information, please let me know or else contact Mrs Gwaspari on 278 6917.

LT is top heavy

Dear HPP

Your otherwise interesting article on London Transport (August) is somewhat misleading on the question of staff productivity.

Low productivity need not be the result of overmanning. In London, where traffic congestion continues to worsen, buses are increasingly held up turned short of their destinations, and unable to complete their day's schedules. Hence, bus mileage per worker falls as the staff are forced to sit and watch the traffic.

Your article also implies that overmanning is considered in terms of guards, conductors, etc. However, one of LT's most serious problems appears to be top-heavy administration, perhaps resulting from the days when London Country buses were part of the same organisation.

It is significant that productivity has fallen despite one-person operation of buses and increasing use of automation.

A final point on the subject of train services, which you suggest the Borough lacks. That is not quite fair. True, there is no Tube, but it is now possible to book through to the Underground from BR stations and Hackney Central and Hackney Wick. In fact, BR has a total of nine stations in the Borough, with two more projected. True also that services are not all that they might be, but for many journeys, rail is now cheaper than bus. Yet people do not use the train.

We are continuing our campaign for service improvements on both bus and rail, and welcome new support and comments from anyone in Hackney.

Yours faithfully

REFUGE UPDATE

The long-running battle being fought by Hackney Women's Aid to establish a refuge for battered women in Hackney continued last week in the ironically named 'Marriage Room' of the Town Hall. The meeting actually delayed the opening of the refuge at least until the next meeting in late September.

Since the only refuge in Hackney was closed down last October attempts have been made to open another allocated by the Housing Department. Delays lasting several months have occurred over the non-arrival of architects' drawings and alterations necessary to comply to fire regulations.

Alterations to the premises have been necessitated by the desire to classify the refuge as a hostel rather than a multiple occupation. Although the council have agreed to this in principle, the "working inefficiencies" within the planning department has caused difficulties.

Planning permission has not been refused, it has simply not been dealt with.

Recently the GLC Fire Brigade Officer visited the premises to advise on fire precautions and recommended the installation of fire extinguishers and sprinklers. Though necessary, these precautions could lead to further delay due to the extra cost involved.

Although the Social Services Department has done much work to hasten the project it is still bogged down in bureaucracy. We suggest that if you feel strongly about this matter you should petition your local MP to bring pressure to bear.

Meanwhile if you do need help Hackney Women's Aid runs an advice line every Thursday from 1-5pm on 249 8334.

FIGHTBACK

At the Fightback meeting of June 7th, it was agreed to convene a meeting of all grant-aided organisations in Hackney. As a result of Hackney Borough Council's "economies", the Council Grants Panel decided only to allow a 10% increase in grants to allow for inflation, instead of the 15% originally suggested to cover rising costs.

Increases that organisations have received appear to be varied, however, and if most organisations receive an extra 10% this will mean a reduction in expenditure: whether this saving is made in salaries or other costs, some small organisations will be put into jeopardy and larger ones will have to reduce their services.

In addition, the current position on inflation for Partnership grants is extremely unclear. Councillors will be taking decisions in September and it is very important that maximum pressure is applied for realistic inflation agreements.

The meeting will look at:

1. the level of grant increases organisations have received from Hackney Borough Council;

2. the likely consequences of inadequate increases;

3. discussion of ways to obtain proper increases both on individual and a joint basis;

4. need for some form of regular contact for community and voluntary groups about funding.

The meeting will be held at 7.30pm on Thursday 4 September at the Family Centre, 50 Rectory Road, N16.

report stated that he had objected to the mode of administering insulin and had demanded the removal of the tubes. It was not possible to arrange further care because of the patient's attitude. Later the same day he was visited at his home by Mrs. Valerie Roberts and Hackney Councillor, Richard Gee. They were so disturbed at his condition that they persuaded him to move to the Robert's home in Glenarm Rd., Hackney. On 21 March he was taken by ambulance to Hackney Hospital.

Matthew was in hospital for five weeks, and for four of these he remained very ill. Treatment of his diabetes was complicated by his stomach problems. For a month he continually vomited mucus and could not hold down any food or drink. In the last week he began to recover and on 30 April he discharged himself, saying that he needed the challenge of being in charge of his own body.

At first his friends were worried, but self help appeared to be the therapy he needed, for within a week he was visiting them on his bicycle. His GP, Dr. Smith, saw him on 9 May when he was very thin but cheerful. He was pleased with his treatment in Hackney Hospital and told his doctor that he was "picking up". He did not tell the doctor about the assault or the refusal of insulin in Pentonville. Asked at the inquest to comment on Matthew's credibility Dr. Smith said that if he had told him he would have had no reason to disbelieve him.

Stanley Clinton Davis, MP for Hackney Central, has sent three letters to the Home Office about this case since March. The Home Office have alleged that Mr O'Hara concealed from the prison that he was diabetic, and they say there is no evidence for the assault. Their letters cast doubt on Mr O'Hara's sanity. Dr Smith, however, told the coroner that Matthew had been his patient since 1972 and he was definitely not insane.

Summing up the coroner, Dr Chambers, said that cases where the body was found in such a condition that the cause of death was unascertainable were not infrequent in court. He had allowed more time than was usual to this case because of the issues associated with it, but in view of the pathologist's report the only verdict he could return was an open one.

LT: end of the road

This month saw the start of a programme to replace Hackney's Fleetline buses with reconditioned Green Line Routemasters, which are in fact over 20 years old. The Fleetline bus, designed by BL engineers as a front-entry, one-person operated vehicle, has been unable to survive London's traffic conditions.

Known as the BM by bus crews the Fleetline possesses poor road-handling characteristics in wet weather, due to the extra weight of the engine positioned at the rear of the bus. Also, having been designed as a one-operator bus, the driver/conductor has poor crowd control over standing passengers and this adds to the stress placed on bus crews.

The scrapping of the Fleetline buses has meant considerable costs. The reintroduction of the reconditioned Routemasters will cost millions of pounds to London Transport and ultimately passengers throughout the capital. It is another example of poor forethought by the LT Executive. The costs will undoubtedly be reflected in higher fares.

It is management mistakes like this which have made London's bus service one of the most expensive, per passenger mile, in the world.

Morons Visit Ireland

Last month local band Oxy and the Morons went to Belfast along with members of the Troops Out Movement, and played in the 'Rock the Block' open air festival. Below, Fred Patriot of the band describes what they saw, and the impressions they formed of life in the besieged city.

Used as a last-minute stop gap after numerous wanky libertarians (Pop Group, Slits, etc.) had pulled out, the Morons embarked for Belfast on Friday morning. The purpose - to play the 'Rock the Block' open air festival. The concert was organised to mark the anniversary of internment and was co-ordinated from this end by Charter 80, a campaign for human rights for the men in H-Block and the women in Armagh.

Arriving at Andersonstown social club (in the heart of the besieged Catholic area) late Friday, we received the massively warm response we'd come to expect from a previous visit from both the locals and those sartorially snappy pop stars, the Au Pairs.

To sit in the community club (far more community-oriented than an English pub and and certainly no 'Provo drinking hole') was to witness exactly the extent of English media misrepresentation. We were seeing an entire community, from young to old, united against one thing - British repression. Fuck the cosy view of IRA 'animals' and bullied underlings. The Provos are ordinary family people of the community and given its willing support.

It has to be admitted there are occurrences which we the British with our relative freedoms find difficult to take (eg, knee-cappings). Again these are blown out of proportion by the British media and have to be taken in the context of a community at war. There is no police force (the exclusively loyalist RUC being obviously unacceptable) and therefore self-discipline is at a premium. In such a hard-pressed environment there is no room for manoeuvre with persistent transgressors.

What war? Simply walking back from the club we were stopped and questioned three times by soldiers (geezer who point rifles at your head). On arrival at the area where we stayed we were engulfed by a vision of total craziness. Car-fuelled bonfires in the middle of the road, looming saracens, people with their legs ripped off by rubber bullets (which in fact are 4-inch cylinders of hard plastic!). It made 'Apocalypse Now' look like a B-movie.

The gig itself on the Saturday was anti-climactic. Poorly attended but fun, it seemed insignificant after the events of the previous night. The following night was spent lying in solidarity again with the community.

The long haul back from Stranraer was spent in a barely comprehending stupor, reflecting on what we had actually experienced during the weekend.

Office have simply dragged their feet. They take about 7 weeks to reply to a letter and their replies have been obstructive and uninformative. They claim that Matthew brought his illness on himself and that this conclusion is based on medical reports in their possession, but they have not sent us copies of the reports. We believe that they have selected passages from the reports that seem to support their case. A passage from a report read at the inquest suggests that they have suppressed the parts that reflect badly on the prison. We want all the evidence produced and a full

After the inquest friends of Matthew O'Hara expressed satisfaction with the manner in which it had been conducted. Speaking for them Andrew Roberts said:

"For 5 months now Stanley Clinton Davis MP has been pressing the Home Office for an explanation of what happened to Matthew in Pentonville Prison. The Home and detailed inquiry into Matthew's treatment."

Matthew was buried at Manor Park Cemetery on 16 July. Along with relatives and other friends the mourners included comrades from the Mental Patient's Union, representatives of Centreprise, Councillors Ruth and Richard Gee, and actress Sue Pollard. Amongst the floral tributes that surrounded the coffin was one from the Friends of Blair Peach.

The Friends of Matthew O'Hara would be grateful for any contributions towards the costs of their campaign. They should be sent to: Andrew Roberts, 177 Glenarm Rd, Hackney, E5 0NB.

C.N.D. COMEBACK AT FESTIVAL

The Anti-Nuclear Festival held at Clissold Park on Sunday August 10th was a significant event. Organised by Hackney Anti-Nuclear Group (H.A.N.G.) and supported by Hackney Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (H.C.N.D.), it strengthened the links between the two groups and drew attention to the connection between nuclear weapons and nuclear power.

During the afternoon members of H.C.N.D. built a nuclear fall-out shelter to the specifications of the Government handbook "Protect and Survive" (i.e. one table, one radio, some sandbags etc.) whilst others in the group read extracts from the booklet on stage. One extract which highlighted the discrepancies between the government's version of protection in a nuclear attack and the disarmers', stated: "Limit the fire hazards. Remove anything which may burn easily, such as paper and cardboard. Keep buckets of water ready. Do not smoke." "But" said Hackney C.N.D. "when the bomb drops it will form a giant fireball perhaps three miles across, and the inside of it will be as hot as the sun. Isolated fires could start up to 28 miles away, and could all join up together in a great fire-storm. Through "Protect and Survive", the government is misleading us. Their instructions will protect only a few. If they told us the truth about the probable after-effects of nuclear war - the disruption of society as we know it, and the long term health hazards from burns, radiation sickness and cancers - if they told us the truth, would any-one want to survive?

C.N.D. is back - and is growing into the biggest mass movement this country has ever seen.

C.N.D. began in the early 1950s when the public's concern about H-bomb testing grew into a mass disarmament campaign. The black and white C.N.D. symbol was known the world over, so too, were its peaceful demonstrations, 'sit ins' and Aldermaston marches. Yet, though many C.N.D. groups sprung up in those early years, as many quickly died down again. They had not become community-based mass movements. C.N.D. had touched the middle class intelligentsia but had not reached the grass roots of their communities. The fact remains that not more than 4% of those people on Aldermaston marches in the early 50s and 60s were working class.

A kind of Christian, moral outrage was the fuel that fired C.N.D. in this period. For some members this was enough, yet many others wanted to build a C.N.D. that was "truly radical."

It has been argued that C.N.D. "failed to connect" in the 60s because its base was both ethical and theological, possessing neither strong political, nor intellectual arguments. Although this is probably true, the failure of C.N.D. to build and sustain a mass movement lay also in the ideological split between the moderates and radicals (Committee of 100), which resulted in the radicals moving on to the Vietnam issue; and too close ties with the inner conflicts of Labour party democracy.

In 1980 a new form of C.N.D. has grown from the ashes of the old. The Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament is still broad enough to contain people of all political and religious persuasion - but it would be naive to suggest that disarmament is simply a moral issue today. The siting of cruise missiles in Europe and increases in defence spending by the U.S.A, N.A.T.O. and Warsaw Pact countries are all political decisions. C.N.D. has to provide alternatives...workable alternatives to war. Not utopian daydreams nor empty moralising, but sophisticated political arguments based on an understanding of world issues. The aims of C.N.D. today are two-fold. In the short term the call is for no cruise missiles in Britain and no up-dating Polaris. In the long term - disarmament, and the creation of a nuclear free zone in Europe.

Hackney C.N.D. has a rota of speakers - local people - who visit groups and organisations in Hackney when asked to do so, spreading information about the realities of a nuclear war, and advising Hackney people to Protest and Survive. Community groups and organisations are being asked to affiliate to Hackney C.N.D. (at a cost of £3 per year), and individuals asked to become members (50p per year).

If your factory, office, school or organisation would like to book a speaker; or you would like to affiliate or become a member of H.C.N.D. write to:

ANARCHY AT DALSTON JUNCTION

Remember a semi-derelict warehouse at the end of Ashwin Street? Been there since April? HPP hasn't and so missed the opening of Brass Tacks, London's first multi-purpose community workshop. Our society is based on the Brave New World of conspicuous consumption - or, as Aldous Huxley neatly put it, Ending is Better than Mending. It is to the advantage of manufacturers to encourage people to discard anything slightly dated, worn out or broken. Often it is, in fact, cheaper to buy a new washing machine than to mend the old one - and spare parts go out of production almost as fast as the models they fit.

Brain train

Two years ago Michael Young of the Mutual Aid Centre (and the Brain Train open university scheme for commuters) decided to do something about this crazy state of affairs, and about the growing shortage of skilled and semi-skilled labour in the electrical and repair industry. He set in motion a project to found a workshop where young people could be trained to do repairs, on a kind of apprenticeship basis, and where we consumers could go to get our jaded electrical appliances mended.

Not Junk

Brass Tacks is the result of this project. The ground floor and basement of the decaying warehouse off Dalston Junction have been converted into a complex of workshops, office space and a shop, where some of the repaired goods are sold. The shop serves as a frontispiece to the whole venture and is tastefully done up in teak finish, fitted carpet and strategically placed ferns. This was the idea of Robin Dean, manager of Brass Tacks, who came to the venture from a career in commercial advertising and whose attitudes are coloured by his experience of the world of selling. "Although it's an alternative project there's no reason why it can't be sold like any commercial venture, with an aim to professionalism. That's why I've made the shop as professional as possible and not like a junk shop".

Trainees

Behind the shop are the workshops where 19 trainees are being taught the skills of electrical and furniture repair and restoration. This, the core of Brass Tacks, is split into five sections; electrical appliance repair, dealing with things like irons and washing machines; electro-mechanical repair, for TV's, radios, stereos etc; small-scale furniture restoration where trainees learn to do french polishing, laquer spraying and other finish jobs; a large-scale furniture repair workshop, where articles are stripped down, mended and rebuilt; and an upholstery department. Trainees are referred to Brass Tacks from job centres all over London. Generally they are between 19 and 24, although the long-term unemployed are also now eligible. There's been no problem filling the spaces and at least ten people have applied for each of the 20 places for the next intake of trainees. Selection is supposed to be on a first come, first serve basis but, according to Robin Dean, some sifting out has to be done: "Some lads think it's going to be a doddle for a year and aren't really interested in what we're doing and aiming at". Brass Tacks tries to pick out the applicants who really do want some sort of trade skill behind them. There have been only two dismissals (for bad time-keeping) from the present group of trainees, even though they had to actually help build the workshops before moving in. All 19 are men, as two women dropped out -- one of whom is now the shop manageress. The trainees will leave with a report and dossier of photographs on their work to show future employers. One has already been enrolled for a further course at the City Guild.

Aims

What, then, are the aims of Brass Tacks? Robin Dean called himself and his co-workers "anarchists against consumer society". Before Parts are 'cannibalised' and several defunct steam irons, say, are turned into one working iron.

Chain

Ultimately Michael Young and Robin Dean hope to set up a whole chain of community workshops across London. In the meantime they are trying to make Brass Tacks a self-sufficient enterprise. At the moment it is financed by grants; £128,000 from the Manpower Services Commission, which pays the supervisors' wages; £70,800 also from MSC for extras like materials, equipment, rent, rates and running costs; and £14,500 from Hackney Partnership Programme, which has been spent on two vans and more equipment and machinery. The MSC grant has been guaranteed until October 1981 and the Hackney Partnership grant will continue for three years. Organisations run on MSC grants are theoretically forbidden to make a profit, but Brass Tacks has persuaded the authorities to waive this. As Robin Dean pointed out: "This is one of the first STEP projects to make money, but they've accepted that this is going to happen and Brass Tacks has told them that unless we make a profit we'll never get off public funding". Brass Tacks hopes to break even in about two years, although the step to self-sufficiency may have to be made

The warehouse as it was before Brass Tacks took over. Go and look for yourselves if you want to see what it's like now.

Call-Out

The organisers of Brass Tacks are anxious to prevent it becoming too commercial a venture and to keep the idea of "community" going. One of the trainees is permanently employed doing a call-out repair service for old-age pensioners and other needy people referred to them by Task Force. These jobs range from simple repairs which chain shops won't touch, to fitting carpets and curtains. Brass Tacks tries to offer a service with "a little more sympathy and understanding". A plan for the future is to open an evening do-it-yourself workshop, sometime in September. People will be able to bring their own broken stuff in and learn how to mend it themselves. Brass Tacks supervisors will run these week-end and evening classes, possibly backed up by a part-time worker funded by ILEA. Robin Dean was also anxious to emphasise that they are not trying to undercut local traders and repair shops. The intention is merely to "offer a repair facility at competitive rates". In fact local traders have supported the venture and Rumbelows has actually offered some of its out-dated stock.

Future

Other plans for the future are linked with Boot Strap, another community venture. Boot Strap offers workshop space and marketing and retailing assistance to local craftspeople. They, in return, are expected to take on an apprentice. It is the hope of both Brass Tacks and Boot Strap that trainees and craftspeople will set up self-employed "cottage industry" type businesses. A crèche has been provided for Boot Strap and this will be shared by Brass Tacks when the evening classes start. There will also be a canteen and shop for technical books and pamphlets. Brass Tacks is still in the throes of creation, but as Robin Dean said, they aren't trying to present a slick image to the public. They are working at both consolidating what has been done and expanding into new areas. One area might be regular auctions (there's already been one) to sell off donated articles of furniture that aren't worth repairing. Meanwhile any offers of furniture or domestic appliances should be made to Brass Tacks on 249 9462.

Going it alone

One source of income is the sale of the reconditioned, better class furniture. The pricing of this has been "a bit of a headache" for the workshop, but they try to base it on the cost of the materials used and on "what we think is a reasonable price for a shop at Dalston Junction. We can't expect the same kind of customer as at Chalk Farm and we don't want to put people off. So we try to have a fair mix in the shop - some rather expensive articles alongside cheaper ones which haven't had much done to them". Electrical stuff tends to need more work and go for less so it all balances out. When I visited the shop a load of irons going to £8.00 were sitting beside a £50.00 chest of drawers and there were several chairs for £1.50 each. And it's not all up-market antiques. The workshop also repairs old favourites like Parker Knoll chairs and 'ordinary' furniture.

You may not have been aware of it but over the weekend of 16-17 August Hackney was the scene of a national event, The Lea Valley National Inland Waterways Festival.

Over 500 craft of all shapes and sizes, most of them traditional canal narrowboats, had made their way via the canal system to the River Lea from all over Britain. Some had taken two to three weeks to make their journey, negotiating an average of one lock per mile and a half! Judging from the festival there seems to be a growing interest in narrowboats as working and pleasure craft and as homes. The beginning of this century saw a decline in narrowboat construction (and there were numerous pre-1920 boats in evidence) but there has been a revival of activity since 1970. Of course, much of this is due to the development of the canals by the statutory and commercial leisure sector but this has also led to the growth of several thriving canal-freight companies, who had brought along working narrowboats to the festival. They emphasise how competitive inland waterway transport is. It is cleaner, cheaper and in many cases quicker and more efficient than road transport.

Full-size narrowboats are over 70 ft long and have a surprisingly large volume of space for cargo. They are joined in tandem and require very small horsepower engines. In fact, two narrowboats can move as much cargo as three to four lorries in one journey.

A growing number of people have taken to living in narrowboats; one has been turned into a 32-seater cinema, and there is even a theatre group based in a narrowboat.

The environmentalist lobby was represented at the festival by the Save the Walthamstow Marshes campaign, rural canal preservation societies from all over Britain, a canal restoring group (their slogan: Fancy A Dirty Weekend?), and the Waterways Museum on Merseyside.

The CAMRA beer tent was popular and amongst a variety of real ales was Godsons Bitter (Hackney's very own real ale) at 58p a pint.

Other distractions included the Auto Angels, an all-women's motorcycle stunt team from Badminton, two working steam roundabouts, steam engines and the usual selection of arts and crafts (more or less associated with canals) and demonstrations of double-glazing and the like. Even the CEEB had a display to prove how environmentally minded they are: they have laid new power lines under the towpath of the Regents Canal from Hackney to Paddington and have apparently gone to great lengths to avoid disruption to the use of the canal.

I came away from the festival feeling pleasantly optimistic. Perhaps it was simply the result of the beer tent and the sunshine, but I did get the feeling that we were going to hear quite a bit more over the next few years from those people that care about Britain's waterways and that their numbers are growing - it is vital that we do begin to look seriously at inland waterways, in particular the two canals which pass through Hackney are very valuable resources and have great potential as transport routes and leisure facilities. If they were used more fully they could go a long way towards making life in the area more pleasant.

New Play Idea in Stoke Newington

The Stoke Newington Festival was the scene of an interesting new play idea that ought to lead to its adoption in other parts of the Borough.

The idea was tried out by the Youth Section of the Stoke Newington Community Association in conjunction with the Stoke Newington Festival Committee. With a mixture of ropes, tyres, cradle nets and fencing, a mobile playground was set on the corner of Stoke Newington Common (on the corner of Northwold and Stoke Newington Common Roads) for the Sunday afternoon. Linked to this was the Hackney Play Association's play frame and a mixture of lanoline and paint for face painting.

YOUNGSTERS

At first it looked like the youngsters would ignore the mobile playground. A young child mounted the cradle swing and was soon followed by others. Then a mother and child had their faces painted, which led to the child painting the face of a volunteer. From then on it was a busy few hours. A continuous line of kids for face painting, being painted and painting others. A lot of smiling mums and dads and kids using the tyre swings, rope climbs, cradle swing and the play frame.

The exciting thing was the way an idea was able to be adapted to a local common. Given a little help, such a mobile play area could be set up in a street, park or garden - wherever there is interest and a few basic materials, such as were used on the common.

MEETING

One place where you can discuss the practical aspects of building a mobile or temporary play space is the Hackney Play Association.

The Association will start the first of its regular monthly meetings on 8 October. Each meeting will have a topic, which will introduce a local play project.

If you're interested, the Youth Section can be contacted through Barbara Harris at 13 Hollar Road, N16.
